Section 1: Salary Dispute

If an employer fails to pay wages within the prescribed period, an employee may submit a written complaint to the Human Resources department. If the issue remains unresolved, the employee may approach the Labour Commissioner. Repeated delays in wage payment may constitute a violation of wage protection provisions.

Section 2: Wrongful Termination

An employee who believes they were terminated without due process should collect employment records, termination notices, and communication history. The matter may be escalated to labour authorities for review and dispute resolution.

Section 3: Workplace Harassment (POSH)

Employees experiencing workplace harassment should document incidents and report them to the Internal Complaints Committee (ICC). Organizations are expected to provide a safe workplace environment and investigate complaints in a timely manner.

Section 4: Leave Denial

Employees may be entitled to maternity leave, medical leave, or annual leave depending on applicable regulations and company policy. Improper denial of legally protected leave can be challenged through internal grievance mechanisms.
